

The Grant Monument.

Before the sum is wholly subscribed there will be time carefully to consider what form the memorial should take, and the other question which the death and burial of General Grant have brought prominently forward, whether there should not be a common national ground, a campo santo, in which the great heroes should be buried, and which would become at once a shrine of national pilgrimage and an ever-renewing fountain of national union and patriotism.

There is one obvious objection to such a scheme, which is that the claims of distinguished citizens to such national sepulture must be determined by Congress, and the result would be almost inevitable that mere partisan feeling would largely determine a question which such feeling can not justly decide. There is to be considered, also, the advantage of the distribution of such national shrines throughout the country by the burial of every great citizen at his home. Mount Vernon is a temple and a monument which even the Capitol would not be if the dust of other great Americans were deposited in its crypts. "Like the battle-fields of the Revolution which are scattered over the old thirteen States, and each of which is a consecrated field of patriotism, the graves of famous Americans cherished amid the local scenes of their lives would be altars of ennobling patriotism everywhere in the land.

It is objected, indeed, and very forcibly, that they are not cherished, but fall often into most unseemly neglect. Wherever this is true, it is a caustic reproach of the neighborhood or of the family. But it is hardly a reason for national interment that a great man's kithred are negligent of his grave. In a little town among the hills of western Massachusetts there is a monument to the "ever-living memory" of the son of the town who died in the service of the Union. It is not a shaft, not a statue, not a pyramid; it is a granite fountain, the stone forming a low and modest monument, while the water flows from the four sides into convenient basins, and upon the square sides of the stone superstructure are engraved the brief inscription and the names of the soldiers. It stands in the midst of the village street, and the man who stops to drink and to water his horses reads the names and the inscription, and the man and beast resume their journey refreshed, the man perhaps reflecting that even so the self-sacrifice of the soldiers refreshed the strength of his country and of mankind striving for still higher and truer liberty.

May not a memorial of Grant be of a kind which by its practical benefits to his countrymen may recall and symbolize his immense and modest, unanimous services to his country? George William Curtis, in Harper's Magazine for November.

Man for Master.

A good story is told about town at this moment, says a Pittsburg Dispatch correspondent. There is a great demand for persons connected with the foreign legation. They are invited everywhere. Young attaches who could not get inside of a fashionable door in London, Paris, Berlin, or the city from whence they came, are here lionized to a degree that makes their heads swim. They are naturally delighted with America, and float along on the surface of the fashionable current of Washington as big as Newtown pippins. Some of these fellows actually live on their invitations to dinner, only paying for the breakfast at some cafe. Well, the story goes that one of them was asked to dinner by a family, the heads of which were total strangers to him. He knew that invitations had been extended to others of his set, who had declined, so he was quite certain it was not his person that was wanted. Meeting another young fellow the latter suggested that an experiment be tried.

"Give it to your valet," said his merry friend. "I'll wager they will never discover the difference; he's such a bloody Englishman. They don't know you. All they want is somebody there, you know. By Jove! what a lark!"

"I'll do it," said the other. And he did. Instructing his valet, who is fully as polite and genteel looking as his master, the latter posted off to the residence at the proper hour in the legation carriage.

What transpired there may be imagined from the fact that among the dinner guests given in the society papers was the name of the young secretary, and from the account of the affair which has leaked out through other servants to whom the valet confided the story, it would seem from the latter that the valet got along very well until the wine began coming around to him too frequently. He knew all about his master's affairs, and discoursed on diplomatic matters with exceeding volubility. As he got mellow, however, his dignity gave way, and his gossip became that interesting stuff retailed by servants below stairs. To anybody who had been accustomed to move in diplomatic society, his talk would have betrayed the real state of the case; but the parvenues who were entertaining him were ignorant, and accepted his vulgarities as the eccentricity of foreigners. They piled every courtesy upon the valet until he could no longer bear them, but was finally interrupted in the act of making love to one of the ladies of the house, put into his carriage quietly, and sent home. To the credit of the family, it may be added that the young secretary never got another invitation.

Among the young men of title and fortune who may be said to be coming on for the next London season is Sir Henry Alfred Doughty Tichborne, who will in May next be of age. The youthful Baronet is now in his 20th year, having been born in May, 1866. The necessity of defending his property against the celebrated Tichborne Claimant has entailed upon his trustees the enormous expenditure of £120,000. His estates are in Hampshire, Lincolnshire, Dorsetshire, and Buckinghamshire, and represent between 11,000 and 12,000 acres. There are in addition, London properties, bringing up the gross rent roll to £28,000 a year.

AN EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

To All Wanting Employment.

We want live, energetic and capable agents in every county in the United States and Canada to sell a patent article of great merit, on its merits.

An article having a large sale, paying over 100 per cent profit, having no competition, and on which the agent is protected in the exclusive sale by a deed given for each and every county he may secure from us. With all these advantages to our agents and the fact that it is an article that can be sold to every householder it might not be necessary to make as "extraordinary offer" to secure good agents at once, but we have concluded to make it to show, not only our confidence in the merits of our invention, but in its salability by any agent that will handle it with energy.

Our agents now at work are making from $150 to $300 a month clear, and this fact makes it safe for us to make our offer to all who are out of employment. Any agent that will give our business a thirty days' trial and fail to clear at least $100 in this time, above all expenses, can return all goods unsold to us and we will refund the money paid for them. Any agent or general agent who would like to see or more copies and work them through sub-agents for ninety days and fail to clear at least $750 above all expenses can return all unsold and get their money back. No other employer or agent ever dared to make such offer, nor would we if we did not know that we have agents now making more than double the amount we guaranteed, and in two weeks a day would give a profit of over $125 a month, and that one of our agents took eighteen orders in one day. Our large descriptive circulars explain our offer fully, and there we wish to send to every one out of employment who will send us three one-cent stamps to secure postage. Send at once and secure the agency in time for the boom, and go to work on the terms named in our extraordinary offer. We would like to have the address of all the agents, sewing machine collectors and car-enters in the country, and ask any reader of this paper who has this offer, to send at once the name and address of all such they know.

Address at once, or you will lose the best chance ever offered to have out of employment to make money. 115 South 1st St., Pittsburg, Pa.
